

C memory allocation

In C, the memory is split into the heap and the stack.

Heap

The heap is managed manually by the developer explicitly allocating and freeing memory.

Stack

The stack is managed automatically as function calls are made and terminated.

Benefits and Drawbacks

Although this leaves the possibility of memory leaks or dangling pointers and requires more attention to detail, it offers very high performance.